Now Comes The Rub

The North Atlantic pact has won general approval. Its acceptance in the United States is made certain by the prevailing belief that this country will go to the defense of all the other signatories with or without a diplomatic agreement.

But the next step will not be so easy. There is no prevailing opinion about the amount of military aid that should be given to the other signatories of the Atlantic pact. Nor can there be any under the circumstances.

No one possibly could know how much military assistance would be needed to forestall Russian aggression if that's what the Kremlin decides to try. That's why military men have a rule-of-thumb about preparedness—all that's possible, plus as much more as can be squeezed out of the civilian economy.

The United States mistrusts the military approach to this problem. So do the other signers of the Atlantic pact; that's why they are warning against the danger of letting armament become more important than economic rehabilitation under the Marshall plan.

In this country there is a peculiar danger which comes about through the close connection between economic stability and European aid of all kinds. The question is whether the United States will be able to absorb the shock of a net increase in exports paid for out of its own national income. Beyond that, the question is whether there really needs to be a net increase, or whether the Atlantic pact might justify a cutback in the military budget at home.

It doesn't cost the Russians an extra ruble to keep the Atlantic community on tenterhooks. They can do it with propaganda and an attitude of belligerence. But it will cost the United States billions of dollars to get itself and other countries frightened by Russia off tenterhooks—just how many billions no one can predict. There's a limit. The main order of business in congress is to guess what it is and to hope the guess may be correct.

Brass Tacks For Buckeyes

The blueprint of a more compact state Republican organization which State Chairman Ray Bliss of Akron has unrolled looks good. Party politics is mainly a matter of organization to carry out a program of ideas. Ideas without organization to back them up don't amount to much at the polls.

Bliss, who is tackling the responsibility of Republican state leadership for the first time, calls for a "more liberal and progressive party." The policy committee set up to carry out this aim will do well to define these terms clearly.

There is nothing liberal or progressive in the headlong rush toward the hand-out state which has enthralled new dealers and their allies of expediency for the last 15 years. Unfortunately, it has enthralled some Republicans too, who think that the way to beat the opposition is to play the game.

It isn't. Given a choice between two versions of the same thing, voters will take the original article—no imitations, thank you. The Republican party isn't going to win elections by promising to do what the opposition already is doing. Under the two-party system, voters are entitled to alternatives. They want the privilege of making a choice.

Republican policy makers in Ohio and everywhere else will do well to go back to the original, honest definitions of "liberal" and "progressive." They do not mean "to be liberal with other people's money," or "to make progress toward government paternalism."

But They Don't Grin

Those who claim that events in Britain foreshadow events in the United States by about the span of a generation are keeping an eye on the labor government's budget experiences.

It remains to be seen whether the first government to go whole-hog on supporting its citizens will be able to command their support of the tax schedules necessary to avert bankruptcy.

The labor party is reported to be split in its own ranks over Sir Stafford Cripps' latest "austerity" budget. One newspaper has called it "the grin-and-bear-it" budget—but taxpayers aren't grinning.

Their government's version of a welfare state already is costing them about half of their entire national income, and the Cripps budget boosts the ante. Some labor party leaders are fearful that this may lose them the next general election. They are looking for a formula that will enable them to have gratitude without calling on taxpayers to pay the Piper. If they find it, there will be a ready market for the information in the United States.

The tough truth is that the formula of "spend and spend and elect and elect" isn't the whole story. "Tax and tax" must be added—and that makes a different story.

The Farmers' Share

The rub of the new farm price support program proposed by the Truman administration is the assumption that farmers are entitled to a fixed amount of national income. This has been set at $20,000,000,000 in the prospecting given to the agricultural committees of the house and senate.

Under the existing parity formula, the government is committed only to the maintenance of the same relationship between farm and non-farm prices that existed in 1909-14. Production and consumption of many commodities have changed radically since then. All elements of the parity formula have been aware of the need for modification of the formula. At the same time, administrators of the farm program have been pointing to the advantages of greater flexibility in operating the program. The new program meets both these needs.

But the fixed amount theory will get careful attention in congress. The new formula is a step toward mechanization and a step toward a more realistic approach to the problem of farm income.

power. This has been an important factor in the improved financial position of individual farmers; the agricultural income pie hasn't been sliced into as many pieces.

The present parity formula is concerned only with prices. The new formula is concerned with people—what one large minority is entitled to have as its share of national income. It's obvious that some means of adjusting this share to the total number of people who divide it will have to be found. Otherwise, the farmers' share might be disproportionate to the share received by other minorities whose welfare isn't guaranteed by the government.

The Stars Say

For Sunday, April 10

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

SUNDAY'S astrological forecast is a notably inert and negative one, in which the spirits and energies may be low and static, with little incentive to take active part in any sort of duties, responsibility or more urgent obligations. Under such lackadaisical state of energy and ambition, it would be most beneficial and profitable to make it a day of sabbatical relaxation with concentration on the physical wellbeing.

Birthday Forecast

Those whose birthday it is may find it to their advantage to let things ride and take heed of lagging situations and perhaps tired or shirking energies, or physical indispositions. Major affairs may be blocked or run into snags, limitations, obstacles, therefore it would be an asset to build up the energies, or mend broken fences for future upbuilding. Safeguard health.

A child born on this day may be disinclined for active operations, being serious, reflective and studious rather than dynamic in its urges. Early supervision of lowered vitality could give impetus to its static approach.

For Monday, April 11

MONDAY'S horoscope held a surety of an outstanding opening for promotion, enhanced opportunity for large and expansive operations in which fertile production is due to be accompanied by increased personal, professional, financial and social prestige. Real assets and credit are in line for increase with growing scope and influence. Yet a false move, an impulsive or erratic move, has power to "upset the apple cart." To avert a crash, be wary with innovations, schemes or impulses.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday is, are, are on the state for promotion, preferment, public or financial advancement in which sound principles and ambitious projects are assured due examination and enlarged scope of operation. Social, financial and professional emoluments are in sight. Nevertheless a rash move, impulsive venture or erratic emotional urge could upset the best laid plans and ambitions.

A child born on this day may have splendid opportunities for a fertile and productive career with distinction and success. But an erratic or over-enthusiastic drive may obstruct its best success.

Emergencies in Diabetes Patients

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN, M. D.
Diabetes is not a disorder of the kidney as so many people believe. It is a disorder in which the gland in the abdomen, known as the pancreas, does not form enough of one of its secretions, called insulin.

This insulin is needed so that the body can use sugars. In diabetes the amount of sugar in the blood is above normal and some sugar is found in the urine.

Diabetes is treated with diet and the giving of injections of insulin under the skin. The physician, after careful study, will decide just what diet is required and just how much insulin will be necessary. In mild cases, dietary treatment alone is satisfactory.

Emergencies Occur

In those with diabetes, certain emergencies may occur. One of these is the development of acidosis which may lead to unconsciousness. The acidosis may come on gradually and may be caused by some infection, by failure to follow the prescribed diet, or by not using a sufficient amount of insulin. Diarrhea and vomiting also may be responsible. Unless the acidosis is promptly treated, severe results may follow.

As soon as the diabetes is discovered the general principle of the treatment is to give insulin and sugars at frequent intervals. For example, a patient is given injections of insulin every four hours, with feedings of easily-digested foods, such as glucose, a sugar solution, and milk drinks, at two-hour intervals. The dose of insulin will depend upon the amount of sugar being excreted by the kidneys.

If unconsciousness develops because of the acidosis, the patient should be placed in a hospital at once. He should be kept warm, the foot of the bed raised, and a careful check made of the blood pressure.

Insulin should be injected at once into a vein. It is also important to give fluids, such as a salt solution, directly into the vein. This is allowed to drip into the vein slowly. As soon as the blood sugar begins to drop the glucose solution may be given in place of the salt solution. The insulin injections should be repeated at intervals of three or four hours until the blood sugar is brought back to normal.

Can Take Food After the patient gains consciousness.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

D. D. Would infectious mononucleosis be noticed in a blood count?
Answer: There usually is an increased number of white cells in the blood, particularly the kind known as mononuclear cells. Thus, a blood examination is helpful in making a diagnosis.

Those with diabetes should realize the dangers of acidosis and should follow the physician's instructions carefully so that this condition does not develop. There are thousands of persons with diabetes who are living normal lives, because they are receiving treatment for their condition. But, neglect of diabetes is likely to lead to tragedy.

Early, Late Rites At Presbyterian

Two identical worship services at 9:30 a. m. and at 10:45 a. m. will be held Palm Sunday and Easter Sunday at the First Presbyterian church.

The pastor, Rev. Harold L. Ogden, will preach at both services. Tomorrow morning the Haviland and Westminster choirs will sing at both services. The Haviland choir will sing "Ride On, Ride On In Majesty," while the Westminster High school choir will sing "The Psalms."

The two services are being held on Palm Sunday in an effort to seat all worshippers in the sanctuary for both services rather than be forced to use the chapel, aided by the public address system.

Two services will be held on Easter Sunday, using both sanctuary and chapel at both services. All three robed choirs of the church will sing.

The Sunday School program will go through as scheduled tomorrow with the Westminster choir going to their classes at ten o'clock following their anthem at the 9:30 service.

On Easter Sunday, the church school will give way to the two worship services as it will be necessary to use both chapel and sanctuary at the 9:30 a. m. and 10:45 a. m. worship hour.

The primary department will worship together with the teachers at the 9:30 service on Easter and then have a program in their rooms during the hour of the late service.

Official Ousted

COLUMBUS, April 9—(AP)—Walton Bell, Belmont county highway superintendent, was removed from office effective April 13 in an order filed today with the Civil Service commission by T. J. Kauer, state highway director.

Removal charges filed against Bell include misfeasance, malfeasance and political activity. He filed an immediate appeal against removal. Kauer's order charged Bell with firing 44 workers because of political affiliations during 1947-48. The director said the 44 refused to resign, then were laid off and then replaced illegally and in violation of Civil Service laws.

Specific charges were that between Oct. 27 and Nov. 2, 1948, Bell permitted some of his employees to leave work to campaign for Republican candidates, and that the men were paid by the state for such time off, with Bell approving the payroll.

Bell, a resident of Barnesville, had been Belmont county superintendent two years. He was suspended March 14 for 30 days from the job which pays $228 per month.

In other orders filed with the commission, Kauer suspended Geo. H. Kirbert, Hamilton county highway superintendent, for 30 days effective April 22. William G. Schramm, a 93-cent per hour truck driver in the same county, drew a five-day suspension effective April 14. Kirbert's base pay is $233.05. Reasons for the suspensions were not divulged.
